Although it is a member of the squirrel family and closely related to the prairie dog, chipmunk, woodchuck, and ground hog, this particular species - the Vancouver Island Marmot is possibly the rarest mammal in the world, numbering 29 known individuals. It is a house-cat size burrowing rodent with a diminishing habitat and numbers. It has rich chocolate brown fur with white patches. These monogomous, herbivorous mammals hibernate for about 8 months of the year. They are obviously, critically endangered.
