When G-d dictated "LO TVASHEIL G'DI BACHALEIV IMO" (don't cook a g'di in its mother's milk) and explained to him the laws of meat in milk, Moshe asked for permission to write Meat & Milk in the Torah (rather than to more obscure expression we have, which needs explanation from the Oral Law). G-d told him to write the specific words he was told to write. Commentaries on the Midrash teach that we received the Torah rather than the angels because they misinterpreted the command about Meat & Milk (when they were Avraham's guests). We must commit ourselves to the package deal of the Written Word and the Oral Law.

Tuesday, Nov. 21, 7:00pm “Partisans of Vilna”

Excellent documentary on the resistance of Jewish partisans, fighting against the Nazis while living in the forests of Lithuania and Poland. Interviews with many of the former partisans, most particularly Abba Kovner, the Commander of the Vilna Jewish underground, as well as other survivors of the Vilna ghetto are interspersed with archival footage. A very moving and informative film. (2h 10m)

Sometimes...

Hebrew words with more than one syllable are almost always accented on the last syllable (MILRA) or the next to the last syllable (MIL-EIL). Once in a while, we find a word that is double MIL-EIL, i.e. accented on neither of the last two syllables, but rather on the second from the last syllable.

And sometimes, we find a word that is only "sort of" like a double MIL-EIL. Vayeira has such a word: הֵאָהָלָה - Avraham rushed TO THE TENT.

The accent, as you can tell from the TROP-mark, is on the second syllable, O. The word is pronounced ha-O-hela. Lower case letters are unaccented; uppercase letters indicate the accented syllable. However, although it sounds like there are 4 syllables altogether, there are really only three. ha is the first one. O is the second one. And since the vowel under the second HEI is a CHATAF-SEGOL, it is a very short vowel and is treated like a SH'VA NA, meaning it is considered to be part of the following syllable, rather than its own. So the third and last syllable of the word is hela. That means that the word is regular MIL-EIL, being accented on the next to the last syllable. But it still sounds to us like a double MIL-EIL word, which is why we've decided to review this topic with its subtleties. Another word in Vayeira that is like ha-O-hela is "to TZO'AR", צִעָרָה. Same thing. A pretend double MIL-EIL.
